HEALTH

Calgary's chlamydia rates closing in on Edmonton's

Robson Fletcher
Metro | Calgary

Young adults in Calgary have historically had far lower rates of sexually transmitted infections than their peers in Edmonton but now appear to be closing the gap.

Chlamydia rates continue to climb in the Calgary health zone, according to new data from Alberta Health, in particular in the 20-to-24 age range, which saw a nearly 10-per-cent jump in 2014 compared to the previous five-year average.

That age group usually sees the most STIs, with rates four to five times higher than the general population.

The Calgary zone saw a chlamydia incidence rate of 1,785 — that's the number cases per 100,000 people — in the 20-to-24 age range last year, compared to a rate of 1,854 in the Edmonton zone and 2,010 provincewide.

But while Calgary's rate has been edging upward, Edmonton's rate has been on a downward trend from its peak of 2,042 in 2012.

Gonorrhea rates in Edmonton, by contrast, remain much higher than in Calgary, with young adults in the provincial capital contracting the disease twice as often as their counterparts down south.

Charges laid after prostitution sweep

Calgary police have charged 32 individuals with "obtaining sexual services" and four individuals with obtaining or communicating for the purposes of attaining sexual services from a minor.

In a sweep of the Beltline and Forest Lawn Industrial Area, both identified by police and the community as problem areas, police completed two stings: one from March 24 to 27 and a second from June 22 to 25, specifically targeting offenders attempting to purchase sex from underage females.

Police charged four people in the second sting: from Calgary, Nam Voong, 29; Muneeb Uddin Alvi, 20; and Mark Kennedy, 53; as well as James Harder, 27, from Ontario and residing in Calgary. METRO

Cab driver forced to kiss licence goodbye

DISCRIMINATION

Driver who 'kicked out' gay couple suspended

Helen Pike
Metro | Calgary

A Calgary United Cab driver has had his licence suspended while Livery Transportation Services investigate a complaint he was discriminating against two male passengers kissing in the back seat.

Stephen Eze picked up Nolan Hill and Justin O'Shae when they flagged him down on 11 Avenue and 3 Street SE. The trip was abruptly stopped after Hill alleged he was "kicked out of a taxi" and told he was "disgusting for kissing another man."

Calgary United Cab handed over footage from that fare and after a review by Livery and Transportation Services his licence was suspended until Aug. 5. Eze had been working with United for about three months, according to manager Naeem Chaudhry.

News of the suspension was a relief to Hill.

"I have heard that the driver in the case has been suspended," he said in a written statement. "I am now processing what has been an overwhelming couple of days."

He called the decision to suspend Eze's licence "appropriate" and said he's glad people are talking about this issue in Calgary.

In a release, Mario Henriques, chief livery inspector with the City of Calgary said Calgarians and visitors should feel safe when travelling by taxi.

"Under the City of Calgary Livery Transport Bylaw … every driver while operating a taxi, must be professional and courteous. And in this situation our investigation has shown the driver's actions were neither professional nor courteous."

Chaudhry didn't review the footage, but said the driver told him the two men were canoodling to the point of being distracting.

"He asked them not to," Chaudhry said. "This is what he said; I don't know, he's not comfortable because he can't concentrate on the driving, which is not safe."

He added the company policy is to teach drivers to be professional and not meddle in other people's lifestyles.

"If somebody is making comments, that's not the company policy and we don't accept the driver," said Chaudhry. "We just simply ask the driver to find somewhere else to drive."

PRIMARY CARE SERVICES

Health networks get funds returned

Alberta's Primary Care Networks will be allowed to invest $75 million back into their operations that the previous Tory government had denied them.

In the proposed spring budget, the $75 million that care networks in the province had in surplus was proposed to be used to pay for operations in the year ahead. But on Tuesday, NDP Health Minister Sarah Hoffman said she's reversing that move because it would hurt service.

"This was going to result in a number of staff being laid off and their need to contract their services," she said.

In addition to returning the surplus, the government will conduct a financial review of the primary care model to see how money is being spent.

"We're basically going in with 12 PCNs, having them open up their books and seeing where some of the surpluses have accumulated," said Hoffman.

Primary care networks are groupings of family physicians that offer additional services to patients like dietitians, therapists and other specialists.

Dr. Phillip Van Der Merwe, chair of the Primary Care Network group of the Alberta Medical Association, said it's a relief to get the funding returned.

"It would have affected front line workers and at the same time also affected patient care." RYAN TUMILTY/METRO

Southwest ring road will be finished by 2022: NDP

INFRASTRUCTURE

No decisions yet on final west portion

Robson Fletcher
Metro | Calgary

Alberta's new NDP government remains committed to completing the southwest portion of Calgary's ring road by 2022 at the latest, but says no decisions have been made on the final west leg that would complete the circuit around the city.

Infrastructure Minister Brian Mason told reporters Tuesday he actually expects the southwest portion to be completed in six years, leaving one year to spare for any contingencies, given the seven-year deadline imposed by the province's land-transfer agreement with the Tsuu T'ina First Nation.

"Now it's up to us to get it done," Mason said, noting "time is of the essence" as the agreement specifies the province must open the southwest road to traffic by May 2022 or else the land reverts to the First Nation.

As for the west leg of the ring road that would run from Highway 8 to Highway 1, Mason said his government is still reviewing that project's timelines.

The previous PC government had announced plans to delay that final portion of the ring road until as late as 2025.

Mason said Tuesday he's not in a position to commit that the west leg will also be fully open by 2022, but didn't rule it out either.

Mason also said the province is applying for $583 million in federal funding from the Building Canada Fund for the southwest leg, but he wouldn't reveal the province's internal estimates for the total price tag of that project, saying it would unduly influence bids from construction companies.

Alberta Infrastructure and Transportation Minister Brian Mason speaks to reporters in Calgary Tuesday. ROBSON FLETCHER/METRO

Tsuu T'ina CEO Peter Manywounds said the nation is looking forward to the completion of the megaproject and he's confident the province will meet its deadlines.

"The principal reason that Tsuu T'ina members agreed to the southwest leg of the ring road was for the opportunities for economic development," he said.

> The principal reason that Tsuu T'ina members agreed to the southwest leg of the ring road was for the opportunities for economic development.
> Peter Manywounds

The west leg would be a "missing link" in the overall ring road if it indeed doesn't open along with the southwest leg by 2022, said project manager Gary Lamb, but he noted Sarcee Trail from Glenmore Trail to Highway 1 would still function as a connector route for some time.

"In my opinion, traffic will accommodate itself with the missing link for a few years," Lamb said. "Ultimately it starts to fail because as Calgary continues to grow, we need more and more road infrastructure."

Wildrose MLA Leela Aheer said the province should open the west leg and southwest leg together.

"It's imperative," she said of the final link in the ring-road project.

Mason said the southwest project will continue as a public-private partnership, as was initially planned by the previous PC government, even though that approach "is not our preference."

RED DEER

Scouts work with RCMP over sex assault charges

Morgan Modjeski
Metro | Calgary

Scouts Canada said its confident allegations of sexual assault brought against a youth who served as both a scout and a cadet won't impact the organization.

On Tuesday, officials with Scouts Canada said they're fully co-operating with RCMP as they investigate several alleged incidents of sexual assault, which targeted both male and female youth in central Alberta between 2011 and 2015.

Red Deer RCMP say some of the alleged incidents took place while on trips with the organization and charges were sought after a victim came forward with a complaint in May.

An eight-week investigation following the complaint identified four other alleged victims.

John Petitti, executive director of marketing and communications with Scouts Canada, said they have been in communication with RCMP.

"We've got a strong relationship with the RCMP in every market across Canada and have a history of working with them wherever possible in order to support their investigations," Petitti said.

He explained Scouts Canada will provide RCMP with whatever records they require on the individual or the individual's scouting activities. In this case, the 17-year-old was with Scouts Canada from 2007 to 2012 and Cadets Canada between 2011 and 2015.

Petitti said scouts and cadets work to ensure everyone involved with the organization has an understanding of acceptable behaviour.

"What we really focus on is making sure that we have our education and training standards in place," he said. "That youth in scouting, when they participate in this organization, have an understanding of what types of behaviour are acceptable."

BACKGROUND

According to Scouts Canada's annual report, the organization had 88,453 members from 2013 to 2014, with 66,741 classified as youth members, 21,437 classified as volunteers and 275 listed as employees.

MURDER

Experts study accused's profiles

Online profiles of a man accused in the murder of Shannon Burgess are under scrutiny in the days after murder charges were laid and her body recovered.

Joshua Burgess was charged with second-degree murder after police found the body of his wife, Shannon, on the property of the home the couple shared.

In the months following Shannon's disappearance, Joshua kept at least one online dating profile and employees where Shannon had worked prior said he regularly brought in other women.

Dr. Melissa Boyce, senior instructor in the Department of Psychology at the University of Calgary, said with questions remaining over Burgess's guilt, or the nature of the couple's relationship, it's difficult to draw conclusions from either his Facebook or OkCupid profile.

"If he was connected to it (the death), then actively seeking out partners and having your wife's picture in the profile and saying you're married but in an open relationship may be perceived as callous," she said.

Burgess's OkCupid profile states that he's in an "open-relationship," seeking "short-term dating" and in the questions section, where users answer a series of compatibility questions, Burgess answered "yes" to "Have you ever been suicidal?" and "yes- severely" to "Have you ever experienced mental illness?"

Boyce said that although it's known that he was last active on the profile May 9, it's impossible to know when the profile was created or last updated.

She said it's possible the profile was created prior to Shannon's death and that it would be "obviously more concerning" if the profile was created or changed "in the aftermath" of Shannon's disappearance, in which case, "it could be taken in multiple ways."

"Some of which are more innocuous, such as he was looking for comfort or believed his wife left him," said Boyce.

"And some of which are more incriminating, such as he was actively seeking out new partners prior to the police finding his wife's body."

In terms of his answers to questions about his mental health, Burgess's lawyer, Allan Fay said that his client hadn't mentioned mental illness to him. LUCIE EDWARDSON/FOR METRO

Trolls mock #SafeStampede with ugly online Reddit game

INTERNET

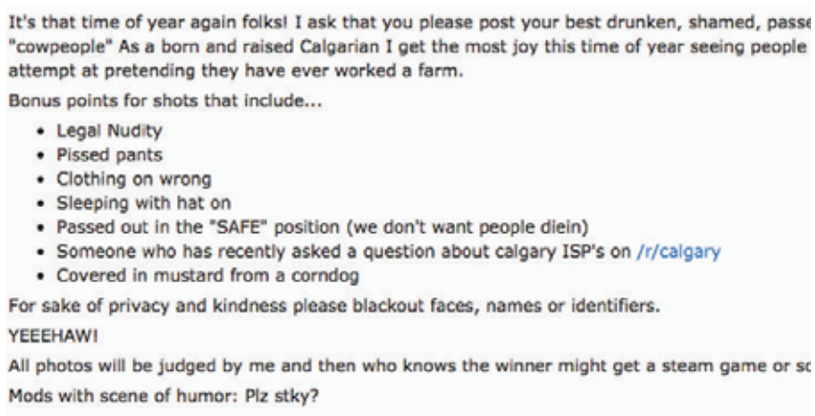
Website post asks for pics of naked, passed out revellers

Helen Pike
Metro | Calgary

It's off to the races for most after a successful first Stampede weekend, but for some, the kind of fun happening off grounds is leaving a bad taste.

Some Calgarians and come-from-aways are taking to the Internet with rodeo fun of their own, but in light of pleas for a safe Stampede, experts and advocates are shaking their heads over some crude online "games."

Last week, days after Mayor Naheed Nenshi and others took to the web in support for a #SafeStampede for all, "trolls" took to website Reddit hoping to instigate others to join a different kind of celebration.



It's that time of year again folks! I ask that you please post your best drunken, shamed, passe "cowpeople" As a born and raised Calgarian I get the most joy this time of year seeing people attempt at pretending they have ever worked a farm.

Mods with scene of humor: Plz stky?

A screengrab from a recent Reddit post asking users to take pictures of drunk cowfolk. REDDIT

One post alleged a lucrative pool between out-of-towners to see how many "Stampede sloots" participants could "bag." The poster was asking for assistance in finding ideal bars.

Another post called for a game of "f–ed up cowpoke," challenging users to take photos of cowpeople — with blurred out faces — passed out in a safe position or exhibiting soiled pants or "legal nudity."

Crackmacs, an /r/Calgary Reddit moderator, told Metro these types of posts come up often — and not just during Stampede, adding that none of the posts seemed "serious".

"I don't think it matters if it's a joke," said Elizabeth Chorney-Booth of #SafeStampede. "This has nothing to do with the actual Stampede, but it's contributing to that culture that people are finding to be unsafe."

Mayor Naheed Nenshi

Rebecca Sullivan, a University of Calgary professor who specializes in feminist media and cultural studies, said although she's happy the president of Stampede openly supports #SafeStampede, more needs to be done.

"We need other community leaders to step up," she said. "From the corporate community that hosts the no-holds-barred parties, to the bars and restaurants that make unreasonable demands on their servers in terms of how they dress and the amount of customer abuse they have to endure."

IN BRIEF

Evacuees allowed home

About 200 people forced from their homes by wildfires in a northern Alberta community can go home.

RCMP say the evacuation order affecting the North Tallcree First Nation has been cancelled.

The community was evacuated Thursday as a precaution, with many leaving for nearby High Level.

An Alberta official says there are 93 wildfires burning in the province Tuesday, including 37 listed as out of control. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Calgary man charged with strangling cats

Calgary police have charged Ottavio Pio Marchesan, 75, of Calgary, with two counts of animal cruelty following an incident where at least two cats were strangled.

A utility worker found two cats dead and a third still alive — but under distress — in a Dumpster when he decided to call police.

Marchesan's next court appearance is scheduled for Aug. 20, and the Calgary Humane Society continues to investigate. METRO

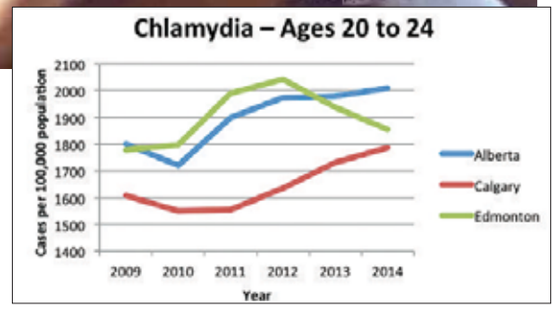
AHS anti-STI campaign is ineffective: Student leader

Robson Fletcher
Metro | Calgary



A still image from a television ad that's part of the Alberta government's ongoing "sexgerms" education campaign on STIs launched in 2013. Inset: Chlamydia rates among young adults in the Calgary and Edmonton health zones, as well as provincewide. YOUTUBE; ALBERTA HEALTH DATA

What did the infected penis say to the vagina?

Nothing. Penises can't talk, but they can pass on dangerous STIs.

That joke is one of about a dozen cheeky widgets on the front page of sexgerms.com, an Alberta Health Services website launched in 2013 along with a social-media campaign aimed at getting young people talking about sexually transmitted infections.

The site also prominently features a slot-machine-style "Sexgerm Generator" that, with the click of a mouse, mashes random prefixes and suffixes together to create imaginary diseases like "Poonfluenza" and "Sexoma" and "Pee-Pee-asthenia." It then encourages visitors to share their made-up STI with friends on Twitter using the hashtag #sexgerms.

The last time somebody actually did was 14 months ago, according to Topsy analytic tools.

Fast-forward to 2015, and Levi Nilson couldn't recall the name of the province's latest STI campaign.

"The initiatives from the government and the initiatives from AHS have been pretty underwhelming," said the University of Calgary Students' Union president. "The message from the government definitely doesn't seem to be resonating as much as it should."

In light of increasing rates of chlamydia among young adults in Calgary and what Nilson described as "startling" results from a 2013 survey on student sexual behaviour, both the students' union and the U of C Wellness Centre have been working on their own education campaigns about sexual health.

That survey found just 56.7 per cent of U of C students used a contraceptive the last time they had vaginal intercourse, while 25.2 per cent opted for the "withdrawal" method.

"Those two (survey responses) indicate a need to address healthy sexual behaviour," said Debbie Bruckner, the university's senior director of student wellness, access and support.

To encourage less risky sexual encounters, Nilson said the university hosts an annual education blitz known as Sex Week.

"We give out free condoms and we have brochures and we try to get the word out as much as possible," he said.

The next instalment is to be renamed Sexual Health And Gender Week, he added, or simply SHAG Week, for short.

Last year, the U of C also made international headlines with its successful attempt to break a world record for the most people tested for STIs in one location on a single day.

"That was an interesting initiative, in that we reached 558 people, and not only did they do the test, but each one of them got sexual health information, one-on-one, from a physician," Bruckner said.

Another highly popular event last year saw Dr. Lindsey Doe, who has more than 177,000 subscribers and 16 million views on her "Sexplanations" YouTube channel, visit the U of C. "We had a huge, huge turnout for her presentation," Bruckner said.

Nilson believes that kind of real-life interaction works better at reaching young adults than the types of advertisements and social-media campaigns AHS has traditionally undertaken.

The #sexgerms campaign did include a real-life component when it launched, which involved a person dressed in a giant penis costume visiting bars and snapping photos to post to Twitter. The last photo was posted in November 2013 from the @sexgerms account, which had 44 followers as of Tuesday.

Acting chief medical officer of health Dr. Ada Bennett said the province has no immediate plans for a new campaign.

"The campaign is an ongoing thing. It's going to carry on for a while," she said.

Police ask for public tips on Monday bank robbery

The Calgary Police Service wants the public's help in locating a suspect connected to a bank robbery Monday morning.

According to a release from the Calgary police, the robbery took place at about 10:15 a.m. when a man entered an Alberta Treasury Branch location in the 3600 block of Brentwood Road NW.

Police say he produced a robbery note and indicated to the teller he was armed. However, no weapon was seen. After obtaining an undisclosed amount of cash, he fled the bank. Police say no one was injured during the robbery.

Police described the suspect as white with semi-tanned skin, with a slim build, roughly five foot eight, wearing jeans and a dark hoodie. Anyone with information about the incident is asked to contact the Calgary Police Service non-emergency line at 403-266-1234 or Crime Stoppers to report the information anonymously.

Stampede-goers and the general public will have the chance to virtually ride with front-line EMS staff Wednesday on Twitter.

EMS receives 25 per cent more calls during Stampede than any other time of year with an influx of tourists and more people going out to celebrate, said Darren Sandbeck, chief paramedic at EMS.

"Sometimes people tend to have a little more fun at Stampede."

The communications staff at AHS will post photos and information of the ride-along at twitter.com/ahs_media, using the hashtag #AHSEMS.

ECONOMY

Calgary food banks busier as oil prices dip

Jeremy Simes
Metro | Calgary

Since Alberta's economic slide, more Calgarians have been lining up at the food bank to make ends meet, said food bank spokeswoman Shawna Ogston.

The food bank saw a 23 per cent increase in new clients in March, a seven per cent increase in new users in April and a four per cent increase in May, Ogston said Tuesday. Numbers for June and July were not available.

Reasons for smaller growth in new users after March might be due to employment insurance cheques received by clients in April, Ogston suggested, adding that Calgarians seem to only use the food bank as a last resort.

"Calgarians are so proud. They use up their own sources and look for help from family and friends before coming here."

As for the provincial economy, ATB Financial said it remains in doldrums, but is unlikely to go into a recession this year. Thanks to low oil prices, Alberta's gross domestic product will still grow by slightly less than half of one per cent in 2015, the company predicts.

Chief economist Todd Hirsch said over the past year, 38,000 jobs were created, but the province's labour market has weakened overall.

He added that while times are tough, they're not expected to get worse.

"The worst of the downturn is likely behind us," he said in a release Tuesday.

"We are close to the turning point where things could start to gradually improve."

World's only female human cannonball hits Stampede

Krista Sylvester
For Metro | Calgary

There are daredevils and then there's Jennifer Schneider — better known as the Jennifer the Cannon Lady.

Schneider is one of the world's only female human cannonball performers, and she's featured in the Calgary Stampede's Bell Adrenaline Ranch several times a day, where she entertains thousands of visitors with her dangerous stunt.

"I'm a human cannonball and I bring my show around the world and I just love being in a crowd. It thrills me to look around at all of the people watching," she said, adding she has performed the stunt over 4,000 times.

Coming from a family of circus performers, Schneider started learning the stunt when she was 14 years old. There are only 10 human cannonballs in the world, and half of them are from her family.

Even though Schneider is catapulted up to 135 feet (72 feet at the Stampede) out of a powerful cannon, it's the landing that's the most risky.

"Even though I've done this for 26 years, it's still very scary," she said. "There's a lot of power inside the cannon and the net is very dangerous. If you land wrong or have bad landing, you're in trouble."

"It's a mind game," she continued. "And you feel your nerves before performing and you have to focus and make sure it's mind over matter."

> It's a mind battle. It's scary as anything so you have to think your way through it.
> Jennifer the Cannon Lady

In fact, she broke her wrist two months ago after a bad landing into the net in Australia.

But that didn't stop her from bringing her show to Calgary, and she said she's having a great time performing for Calgarians.

"I love it here, it's been a very welcoming crowd and I haven't met a bad apple in Calgary yet. I'm thrilled to be here," she said.

Schneider performs daily at 1:30 p.m., 3:15 p.m., 6:30 p.m. and 9:30 p.m. at the Bell Adrenaline Ranch.

HUMAN RELATIONS

No excuse for bad manners

It can get a little hectic and crazy down at the Stampede grounds, so it's always good to remember to be on your best behaviour.

With thousands and thousands of people walking, eating, drinking and playing all in one space, it's good to remember your Stampede etiquette, and Stampede spokeswoman Jennifer Booth has some friendly tips.

"Stampede is a time for people to get together and have a good time. We like to think that putting on a cowboy hat is an opportunity to elevate behaviour and treat others with respect," Booth said.

Those etiquette reminders includes remembering to smoke in the designated areas only, not to swear loudly in public, not to spit and not to nudge your way into lines, among other things.

"The midway gets really busy to remember to watch out for your fellow cowboys and cowgirls and be careful about texting and walking. It's really just a reminder to be good to those around you."

SOCIAL MEDIA

With all of the drinking that happens during Stampede, there's currently a social media campaign sweeping over Twitter.
Dubbed #SafeStampede, the campaign intends to curb sexual harassment both at the Stampede and at office parties.

'We give away an extreme amount of prizes': Official

Challenge: Win a game on the Calgary Stampede midway without burning a hole in your pocket.

It's not impossible.

In fact, thousands of prizes are given out annually.

"If we were to count all of the prizes that we gave out at the Calgary Stampede, you would be able to fill the Saddledome for 11 hockey games," North American Midway spokesman Scooter Korek said.

72

The number of games on the Calgary Stampede Midway.

"We give away an extreme amount of prizes."

There are many different types of games at the Midway including games geared towards families where there is a prize every time, Korek added.

"We have a wide variety of games and prizes at the midway and there's something for everyone from Whac-a-Mole to the ring toss to darts to the birthday game and Bingo," he said.

"The bigger the prize the harder the game but if somebody plays the birthday game, for example, they have a one-in-12 chance to win, so the chances of walking away with a prize is good."

Korek recommends prize-seekers play games that complement their skills.

"Practice makes perfect. If you're a good pool player, a good ball thrower or a good dart player, those are the games for you. With the skill games you pick what you're good at, and you'll probably walk away with a prize."

Every year the Midway operators pick prizes they think customers will want to win and this year there is everything from fluffy stuffed animals to basketballs to motorized bikes.

CHUCKWAGON RACES

Meet the drivers behind the chucks

It's not every day you get to meet a chuckwagon driver — except, of course, during the Calgary Stampede.

The Calgary Stampede GMC Rangeland Derby chuckwagon competitors have long had a tradition of meeting and greeting fans daily down at the grounds to sign autographs, according to host Billy Melville.

"One of the things that makes this so special is it's very interactive and it's not too often in any professional sport you get to meet the stars participating in it," Melville said.

"The Stampede's iconic event is the chuckwagon races and that's what really sets the Stampede apart and here you get to talk to four stars of this premier event each day so it gives people a chance to bring something special home."

And it's just as much fun for the drivers, including third-generation chuckwagon driver Troy Dorchester, who enjoys meeting with fans of the sport.

"The more, the merrier — it's great. You get to meet a lot of people from all over the world and get to talk to them about this great sport. It means a lot to us," Dorchester said.

The meet-and-greet autograph session happens daily with four drivers from noon until 1 p.m. at the main GMC Rangeland Derby tent near the Saddledome.

Baseball showcase swings into Calgary

MLB ROADSHOW

Interactive event gives fans a taste of the big leagues

Krista Sylvester
For Metro | Calgary

Major League Baseball fans are in luck, as the MLB Roadshow has brought its interactive event to the Calgary Stampede for the first time ever.

The MLB Roadshow debuted in Canada last year and has visited 13 countries on four continents, and now baseball fans at the Stampede are getting a taste of the interactive event that lets fans get into the batting and pitching cage to test their skills, according to MLB International market development specialist Mickey Shupin.

"We know that it's hard for baseball fans with the Toronto Blue Jays as the only Canada-based team and we know across the country baseball is big so we wanted to get out to a broad audience and the Calgary Stampede is a great place to do it," he said of the all-ages activity.

Yesterday was the first day for the MLB Roadshow at the Stampede and baseball fans young and old donned their favourite team jerseys and lined up eagerly awaiting their turns, including the Bhandari brothers — Sachin 11, and Kaithen, 9 — who specifically went to the Stampede for the MLB experience.

"It's really fun because there's not a lot of MLB stuff that comes to Calgary because it's mostly in America, so it's fun to do baseball stuff here," Sachin, a Red Sox fan, said as he waited in line.

His brother, an Angels fan, was excited to get into the pitching and batting cage.

"I like pitching because I was one of the best pitchers on my team this year so I got to pitch a lot and I like batting, too."

Now he just has to go for the hat trick.

Extreme Cowboy Racing competitor William (Runt) Rageth won his second Calgary Stampede Cowboy Up challenge at this year's competition held in the Scotiabank Saddledome from July 4 to July 6.

Rageth and his horse Burdock were against nine competitors in the invite-only competition, which makes the win even more meaningful. Rageth won his first in 2011 and was Reserve in 2012.

"To be with this calibre of people and come out where I did, I'm really fortunate," Rageth said.

"These guys come to whip you. Anything can happen. It can be anybody's day at any time. This is the toughest field in the world. I'm so happy I about can't see straight right now."

The Calgary Stampede Cowboy Up Challenge is a multi-faceted equestrian sporting event that showcases both horse and rider as they manoeuvre through a series of obstacles.

Riders had to deal with a variety of obstacles and agility challenges including bridges, unstable platforms, water hazards and a carousel, among others.

"The course was set up to be fast, but as long as you were smooth, it was a good course. Too fast was going to get you in trouble."

ANTI-CORRUPTION

Death of suspected fraudster confirmed

Quebec's anti-corruption unit has confirmed the death of suspected fraudster Arthur Porter.

The unit said in a statement today that visual identification of the body in Panama was sufficient evidence to confirm the death.

DNA tests and fingerprint analysis were also conducted as a precaution.

News that the 59-year-old Porter had died last week was treated with heavy skepticism by authorities in the province where he faced fraud charges.

Quebec sent two investigators to Panama last Friday to gather evidence that would prove he had died.

Robert Lafreniere, head of the anti-corruption unit, says the fraud charges against Porter related to a superhospital project in Montreal will be dropped.

Porter's biographer, doctor and relatives said last week he succumbed to cancer in Panama, where he'd been detained since May 2013 on a Canadian arrest warrant.

Investigators from Quebec's anti-corruption unit were granted entry to the morgue in Panama City on Monday afternoon.

The alleged $22.5-million fraud has been described by one Quebec provincial police investigator as one of the largest corruption cases in Canadian history.

Porter was the former head of Montreal's McGill University Health Centre and was also once appointed head of Canada's spy watchdog agency by Prime Minister Stephen Harper. THE CANADIAN PRESS

ALBERTA

Man arrested after backhoe pursuit

A 27-year-old former Alberta man faces seven charges following an early morning low-speed pursuit in New Brunswick involving a backhoe.

Thomas Therrien Chiasson, of no fixed address, was arrested Tuesday morning.

RCMP Const. Derek Black says police were called around 3:40 a.m. about a backhoe on the Trans-Canada Highway west of Fredericton that was impeding traffic and didn't have any lights on.

Black says the driver was only travelling about 10 kilometres per hour, but didn't stop until police used a spikebelt.

Police say alcohol is believed to have been a factor.

Chiasson is charged with evading police officers, impaired driving, refusing a breathalyzer demand, possession of stolen property over $5,000, mischief over $5,000, dangerous driving, and breach of a condition imposed by a court in British Columbia.

He has been remanded until a bail hearing Wednesday in Fredericton.

Black says the backhoe damaged some asphalt and a number of guardrails over a distance of about 15 kilometres.

Ross Mathers, general manager of Maritime Road Development Corp., the private company that maintains that section of highway, says there is damage in about 10 locations. Damage is estimated at about $15,000 and he says repairs have begun. THE CANADIAN PRESS

25TH ANNIVERSARY

OKA CRISIS STILL RESONATING

Kanesatake Grand Chief Serge Simon stands in the Pines near the scene of the police raid 25 years ago that started the Oka Crisis, in Kanesatake, Que. July 11 will mark the 25th anniversary of the start of the Oka Crisis that grabbed international headlines, with armed Mohawks and Canadian soldiers involved in a lengthy standoff that often appeared on the verge of exploding into full-blown combat. Native activists, artists and professors say while it's difficult to draw direct links, the Oka uprising in 1990 inspired First Nations movements across the country such as the Idle No More protests in 2012 and the ever-increasing calls for a federal inquiry into missing and murdered aboriginal women.

Wanted: Chainsaw trainers for inmates

PRAIRIES

Program meant to help in job search

Inmates at 11 prisons across the Prairies are in line for chainsaw safety training to help prepare them for future employment once they are released.

Between 110 and 220 inmates could be part of the 22 training sessions that Correctional Service Canada plans to pay for in the coming years at four prisons in Alberta, four more in Saskatchewan and three in Manitoba.

Each session will have between five and 10 inmates participating in training sessions set to start in 2017.

Bid documents posted online earlier this month show that the cost to provide the three-day training sessions should be no more than $108,800.

The winning bidder will have to supply chainsaws, cutting stands, logs, files, oil, gas, chains, and safety equipment to the inmates who take the course at medium and minimum security prisons, three Aboriginal healing lodges — including one for women — and the regional psychiatric centre in Saskatoon.

Only two prisons up for training sessions have maximum security wings: Stony Mountain Institution in Manitoba, and Saskatchewan Penitentiary in Prince Albert, Sask.

> Participants may exhibit difficult or resistant behaviour.
>
> Text on the bid document

The documents also come with a warning to potential bidders: "Participants may exhibit difficult or resistant behaviour."

A spokeswoman for CSC said any inmate who lands in one of the courses has to be "screened for their suitability" and will be supervised.

Melissa Hart says prisons in other parts of the country also provide similar training to inmates, part of the department's mandate to "facilitate inmates' re-entry into the workforce following their release."

Hart said training is targeted at work in the trades, such as carpentry and cabinet making, and said "many offenders" have landed jobs because of their training and demand for trades workers.

A study that Corrections commissioned five years ago concluded that inmates who find work are less likely to reoffend. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Chief urges First Nations to press politicians

National Chief Perry Bellegarde is urging First Nations and other Canadians to push for reconciliation at the polls this fall.

In the first keynote address to the Assembly of First Nations annual meeting, Bellegarde said First Nations voters need to make themselves heard.

The group has identified at least 51 ridings across the country that could be decided by First Nations participation.

Bellegarde said now is the time to mobilize because the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's report has captured the attention of Canadians with its description of the residential school legacy as "cultural genocide."

"Canadians woke up to a chapter of their history that must be forever remembered and never forgotten," Bellegarde told an audience of First Nations leaders from across the country.

This is Bellegarde's first meeting as national chief.

He is calling on the government to respect traditional territories and honour its legal duty to accommodate First Nations people. "Reconciliation means nothing less than keeping the promises the government of Canada first made to our people to share and live together," Bellegarde said.

He has been calling for all federal parties to address indigenous issues in their election platforms.

NDP Leader Tom Mulcair and Liberal Leader Justin Trudeau responded by delivering back-to-back speeches as both parties roll out election promises aimed at aboriginal affairs — although federal Aboriginal Affairs Minister Bernard Valcourt was not present.

Mulcair offered a "new era" of relations with indigenous communities if he becomes prime minister, with plans to commit to a "government-wide" approach to address aboriginal affairs.

Trudeau spoke after Mulcair and announced a series of campaign-style commitments, including a promise to bolster funding for aboriginal education.

Trudeau also addressed the need to overhaul the relationship between First Nations and the federal government, such as targeting the growing socio-economic gap that exists between aboriginal and non-aboriginal Canadians in areas including employment. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Police, FBI raid home of Subway's public face

INDIANA

Authorities mum on reasons for investigation

FBI agents and Indiana State Police raided the home of Subway restaurant spokesman Jared Fogle on Tuesday, removing electronics from the property and searching the house with a police dog, two months after Russell Taylor, the then-executive director of Fogle's foundation, was arrested on child pornography charges.

FBI agent Wendy Osborne said the agency was conducting an investigation in Zionsville, an affluent Indianapolis suburb, but wouldn't say whether it involved Fogle or describe the nature of the investigation.

Subway said in a statement that it is "very concerned" about the raid, which it believes "is related to a prior investigation" of a former employee of the Jared Foundation, an organization founded by Fogle to raise awareness about childhood obesity. Subway did not immediately say whether that employee was former foundation executive director Russell Taylor.

BACKGROUND

Claim to fame

Jared Fogle, 37, became the Subway restaurant chain's pitchman after shedding 245 pounds more than 15 years ago, in part by regularly eating Subway sandwiches. Subway began featuring Fogle in commercials soon after, and his story was instrumental in giving the sandwich chain an image as a healthy place to eat.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The company had removed references to Fogle from its website by late afternoon and issued another statement, saying the two "have mutually agreed to suspend their relationship due to the current investigation."

"Jared continues to co-operate with authorities and he expects no actions to be forthcoming," the company said. "Both Jared and Subway agree that this was the appropriate step to take."

Federal prosecutors in May filed a criminal complaint charging Taylor, 43, with seven counts of production of child pornography and one count of possession of child pornography. Fogle issued a statement after the charges were filed saying he was shocked by the allegations and was severing all ties with Taylor.

The Indianapolis Star photographed Fogle stepping out of a police evidence van parked outside his home Tuesday morning, and he left the house just after noon with attorney Ron Elberger. Fogle declined to comment, but Elberger later released a statement saying his client is co-operating with authorities.

"Jared has been co-operating, and continues to co-operate, with law enforcement in their investigation of unspecified charges, and looks forward to its conclusion," Elberger said.

During a search of Taylor's home this spring, federal investigators say they discovered a cache of sexually explicit photos and videos Taylor allegedly produced by secretly filming minor children at the home. They said they also allegedly found more than 400 videos of child pornography on computers and storage media recovered from Taylor's home office in his Indianapolis residence.

Taylor's attorney, Brad Banks, said Tuesday his client was briefly hospitalized after the allegations surfaced but is now in federal custody. Sheriff's officials have said Taylor tried to take his own life in jail.

"The only thing I can say is that I'm aware that there's an ongoing investigation," Banks said.

Tim Horty, a spokesman for the U.S. attorney's office in Indianapolis, said prosecutors "are moving forward" with the case against Taylor. He declined to comment on Tuesday's raid at Fogle's home.

Neighbours said Fogle and his wife entertained frequently and would say hello but that they didn't see the couple outside a lot.

Jacob Schrader, 19, who lives across from Fogle's house, said the pitchman seems "like a pretty private guy" and that he'd only seen him about a dozen times in the last five or six years.

"He's like an endangered species or something like that," Schrader said.

Subway, which is based in Milford, Conn., and is privately held, has struggled in recent years. Last year, industry tracker Technomic said average sales for Subway stores in the U.S. declined three per cent from the previous year. The company has about 44,000 locations around the world.

GREECE NEGOTIATIONS

Eurozone mood gloomy

Eurozone leaders met the beaming smile of Prime Minister Alexis Tsipras with anger and frustration Tuesday when it became clear the Greek leader came to their summit without a fresh written proposal on how to save his country from financial ruin.

With Greece's banks just days away from a potential collapse that could drag the country out of the euro, Tsipras had been expected to offer up economic reforms in exchange for loans.

Instead he came with only vague proposals and a commitment to back it up with real figures and a written plan on Wednesday.

Tsipras came buoyed by a triumph in Sunday's referendum, where an overwhelming majority of Greeks backed his call to reject the belt-tightening reforms that creditors had last proposed.

But that domestic victory did not appear to give him much leverage in talks with foreign creditors, who know Tsipras needs a deal soon to keep his country afloat. Banks have been shut since last week and will not reopen before Thursday, cash withdrawals have been limited for just as long, and daily business throughout the country has come to a near standstill.

So it was with surprise and anger that European leaders learned Tsipras did not yet have a written proposal for new rescue aid.

"I'm extremely sombre about this summit. I'm also sombre about the question of whether Greece really wants to come up with proposals, with a solution," Dutch Prime Minister Mark Rutte said.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Senate votes 36-3 to bring down flag

The South Carolina Senate gave final approval Tuesday to a bill removing the Confederate flag from a pole in front of the Statehouse, sending the proposal to the House, where it faces a less certain future.

Tuesday's 36-3 vote came after a day of debate in which several white senators said they had come to understand why their black colleagues felt the flag no longer represented the valour of Southern soldiers but the racism that led the South to separate from the United States more than 150 years ago. Senators then stood as Pinckney's widow came in the chamber. Each member came up to talk to her and offer condolences.

Debate in the House was scheduled to begin Wednesday, and it's far from clear when a vote may be taken. Republicans have struggled to reach a consensus on what to do next.

Democrats, meanwhile, say both the flag and flagpole must go. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Selfies risk to your health, warn Russian police

Alarmed by the number of Russians who have been killed while taking photos of themselves, Russian police have started a new campaign called "Safe Selfies."

The instructions issued Tuesday warn against standing on railroad tracks, climbing onto roofs or posing with a gun or a tiger.

Police say at least 10 Russians have been killed and 100 injured while taking selfies this year.

BILL COSBY

Accusers feeling vindicated following drug disclosure

Bill Cosby's accusers see his admission of obtaining Quaaludes to give young women before sex as vindication of their claims that he drugged and sexually assaulted them.

Cosby admitted that he gave Quaaludes, a now-banned sedative, to a 19-year-old woman before they had sex in Las Vegas in the 1970s. He also admitted giving the powerful drug to unnamed others.

His lawyer interfered before he could answer deposition questions in 2005 about how many women were given drugs and whether they knew about it.

"I never thought I would be validated or vindicated in this," said Joan Tarshis, of Woodstock, N.Y., who accused Cosby of drugging and attacking her when she was breaking into comedy writing in 1969. "I mean, it's turned my life around 180 because now all the people that haven't believed me or us have come out, most of them, and said, 'We were wrong.'"

The Associated Press had gone to court to compel the release of a deposition in a 2005 sexual abuse lawsuit filed by former Temple University basketball team employee Andrea Constand — the first of a cascade of lawsuits against Cosby that have severely damaged his image as doting TV dad Dr. Cliff Huxtable on The Cosby Show.

Two Americans, one Brit gored in Pamplona bull run

SAN FERMIN FESTIVAL

People dash with six bulls along narrow course

Two Americans and a Brit were gored and eight other people were injured Tuesday as thousands of daredevils dashed alongside fighting bulls through the streets of Pamplona on the first bull run of the annual San Fermin festival, organizers said.

Mike Webster, a 38-year-old occupational therapist from Gainesville, Fla., was gored as he ran with the bulls in Pamplona for the 38th time in 11 years.

San Fermin's media office said he was gored in the armpit, and Webster told The Associated Press from his hospital bed that he hasn't decided whether he'll run again because he first needs to discuss the issue with his wife.

Also gored were a 27-year-old Californian identified by the media office only by his initials, D.M.O., and a 30-year-old Briton with the initials A.B.O. Neither was in serious condition.

Three other Americans were among the eight others injured, most with bruises from falls and crowd crushes during the nationally televised run that lasted just over two minutes.

The nine-day fiesta in Pamplona, which features 24-hour street partying, was made famous in Ernest Hemingway's 1926 novel The Sun Also Rises and attracts thousands of foreign tourists.

The daily runs see people dashing with six bulls along a narrow, 850-metre course from a holding pen to the city's bullring.

The bulls are then killed by professional matadors in bullfights each afternoon.

Bull runs are a traditional part of summer festivals across Spain. Dozens are injured each year, mostly in falls.

Two men have died recently after being gored by bulls in Spanish festivals — one Saturday in the eastern town of Grao de Castellon and another on June 24 in the southwestern town of Coria.

In all, 15 people have died in Pamplona runs since record-keeping began in 1924 for the San Fermin festival.

SPAIN

ISIL recruiter suspect arrested

Spanish police on Tuesday arrested a woman suspected of recruiting preteen girls and teenagers to send to areas controlled by ISIL (Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant) in Syria.

An Interior Ministry statement said the woman, a Spaniard, was arrested in the city of Arrecife on the Canary Island of Lanzarote.

Separately, the ministry said Civil Guard police arrested an Algerian-born man wanted on terrorism charges by Belgium, where he previously resided. The man, whose name was not released, is a suspected member of ISIL and had fought in Syria. He was arrested in Barcelona airport while waiting for a connecting flight, after flying from Algeria.

The ministry said the woman in Arrecife maintained contact with ISIL militants in Syria, including a facilitator who gave her orders for recruiting girls and arranging their travel to Syria.

Girls and teens who she helped get to Syria ended up being sexually exploited, did domestic work and work in hospitals and had roles policing women, the statement said. A few joined ISIL as combatants, the statement said.

Authorities did not specify how many people the woman was suspected of recruiting, but said police have been investigating her since 2014 in a probe overseen by the National Court in Madrid. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

IRAN

Nuclear deal still elusive as yet another deadline passes

Negotiators at the Iran nuclear talks pushed past their second deadline in a week on Tuesday, raising new questions about the ability of world powers to cut off all Iranian pathways to a bomb through diplomacy. The discussions, already in their 12th day, were prolonged until possibly Friday.

"We knew it would have been difficult, challenging and sometimes hard," said Federica Mogherini, the European Union's foreign policy chief. She said the negotiations would continue despite hitting some "tense" moments, and the U.S. State Department declared the current interim nuclear arrangement with Iran extended through July 10.

As the latest target date arrived for a deal that would set a decade of restrictions on Iran's nuclear program, U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry, Iranian Foreign Minister Mohammad Javad Zarif and other top diplomats huddled in Vienna in search of a breakthrough.

All had spoken of deep differences remaining, and there was no public indication they had resolved disputes ranging from inspection rules on suspicious Iranian sites to limits on Tehran's research and development of advanced nuclear technology.

"The last, difficult, political issues, we have to solve," Mogherini said.

In Washington, White House spokesman Josh Earnest said the parties "have never been closer to reaching a final agreement than we are now" but significant differences remain.

"That's an indication that these talks, at least for now, are worth continuing," he said.

A senior U.S. official in Vienna confirmed that one more clear difference had resurfaced, saying the U.S. would oppose Iran's demand that the nuclear agreement also include the lifting of the UN arms embargo on the country.

The official said the U.S. is insisting that any new UN Security Council resolution pertaining to Iran retain an arms ban and ballistic missile restrictions.

MISS USA

Trump's comments called 'hard to hear'

Controversy continues to surround presidential candidate Donald Trump's comments painting Mexican immigrants as criminals, but the women taking part in the upcoming Miss USA pageant Trump co-owns say the show must go on.

Several Hispanic candidates and one immigrant from Albania taking part in the contest sat down with The Associated Press to discuss the pageant and Trump's comments.

They said everyone has a right to their opinions but distanced themselves from his comments on immigrants, said they're proud of their roots and hoped the upcoming pageant would shed light on the contributions of immigrants.

``It was hard to hear,'' said Natasha Martinez, whose mother emigrated to the United States as a young girl from Nicaragua.

"I think it's important to understand that immigrants come here looking for a better life, and they do make these hard sacrifices like leaving their kids and their countries for long periods of time in hopes that they will be reunited and that they will be able to have a better life here in America,'' said Martinez who represents California.

Trump, a real estate developer, television personality and now-presidential candidate, co-owns Miss Universe which produces the Miss USA pageant. The Miss USA pageant is scheduled to take place on July 12 in Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

Breast milk demand high

States consider legislation, firms battle for industry control

Rachel Palencik holds a container of her frozen breast milk. Palencik recently tried to sell her milk and wants to be sure it goes to one of 4,000 mothers who rely on 15 non-profit milk banks set up across the U.S. However, the entry of for-profit milk banks have created tension between the industry and state lawmakers as they begin to impose industry regulations.
MATT ROURKE/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

It could trade for 400 times more than the price of crude oil and 2,000 times more than iron ore. If sold off the shelf, it could cost more than 150 times the price of a gallon of cow's milk and 15 times more than coffee.

Going for as much as $4 an ounce, breast milk is a hot commodity that is emerging as a surprisingly cutthroat industry, one that U.S. states are seeking to regulate amid a battle for control between non-profit and for-profit banks that supply hospital neonatal units.

The debate among the for-profit and non-profit organizations can be sharp-elbowed. It centres on whose processes result in the safest milk for premature babies in neonatal intensive care units, which need the milk if a mother has difficulty producing enough or the child has trouble latching. Each side claims the moral high ground, with non-profits generally saying milk distribution should be altruistic while for-profit companies argue mothers deserve to be compensated.

In the United States, there are two for-profit companies and soon to be three, and one non-profit that oversees 15 milk banks in the U.S. in addition to three in Canada. Ten non-profit banks are in development. Against this backdrop, lawmakers in New Jersey and Michigan are considering legislation to license banks, while legislators in California, Maryland, New York and Texas already have regulations.

Rachel Palencik, of West Chester, Pa., said her breast milk was taking up space in her freezer, so she tried to donate it to a bank but didn't have enough. So she tried to sell it — and wouldn't try it again.

"A lot of it was either scammers or men wanting to consume it, which isn't my cup of tea," she said.

There's broad agreement in the milk-banking industry of a shortage of human milk available for hospitals and NICUs. The non-profit Human Milk Banking Association of North America estimates that there are 4,000 moms using its banks across the U.S. and it would take 60,000 to meet hospitals' demand for milk.

There is also a largely shared view that it's important for donor milk to be thoroughly screened for bacteria, drugs and adulteration by cow's milk.

The non-profits say they respect the right of moms to sell their milk because it is theirs, but they question the profit motives of companies like Medolac, Prolacta and the soon-to-be-operational International Milk Bank.

The for-profit companies offer moms the chance to earn $1 an ounce to $2.50 an ounce for their milk. In turn, hospitals can pay as little as $4. The companies say mothers have a right to earn money for their milk and their model can end the shortage. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Federal trade deficit increases to $3.34B

Canada's trade deficit grew to $3.34 billion in May compared with $3.0 billion in April, increasing the chances the Bank of Canada will cut its key interest rate next week, economists said Tuesday.

BMO senior economist Benjamin Reitzes said Canada's trade balance is on pace for a record deficit in the second quarter.

"This report caps a run of soft data over recent months and suggests that trade will not be nearly as positive as anticipated at the start of the year," Reitzes said.

"Unless we get another massively positive jobs report ... there's a good chance Governor (Stephen) Poloz will cut rates at next week's policy meeting."

Economists had expected a deficit of $2.5 billion, according to Thomson Reuters.

Statistics Canada said export volumes decreased 2.5 per cent while prices increased 1.9 per cent. Import volumes were up 0.3 per cent. Prices edged down 0.1 per cent.

"All told, the weakness in volumes on the export front will have markets worried about May GDP, although we still expect better news from other categories like retailing," CIBC chief economist Avery Shenfeld said.

"That's one more chip on the side of our forecast for a rate cut by the Bank of Canada next week, with Friday's employment data still one more hurdle to cross." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Cineplex reduces theatre drink sizes

Metro | Toronto

The Cineplex chain of theatres is reducing the size of its regular and large drinks, but not its prices.

"We've reduced the size of a large drink from 44 ounces to 32 ounces, and a regular drink from 32 to 24 ounces, and all other sizes remain the same," said Cineplex spokesman Michael Langdon. "The prices are the same."

He said the change was made because Cineplex believes people prefer smaller drinks.

> "We've reduced the ... large drink from 44 ounces to 32."
> Michael Langdon, Cineplex spokesman

"That's something that's true across the industry. If you look at our 44-ounce drink, for example, after a movie you'll see a lot of them left unfinished."

The theatres piloted the change in B.C., Alberta and Saskatchewan in 2013 and recently began rolling it out across the rest of the chain, Langdon said.

Tourism strong despite bank crisis

Greece is known the world over for its historic sites, sparkling sea, and lovely, vine-shaded restaurants. Add riot police, shuttered banks, and lines at cash machines and the picture clouds.

This is the reality facing tourism in Greece this year, as the peak summer season in the popular destination is threatened by a financial crisis of frightening proportions. Up until now, the charming cafes and outdoor restaurants near the Acropolis have remained overflowing with tourists, but considering the bad publicity of the past week's events, many businesses say they are beginning to see cancellations and a slowdown in reservations.

"Our future bookings are down 20 to 30 per cent," said Edward Fisher, who owns and operates Athens Backpackers and Athens Studios, with prime locations near the Acropolis that cater mostly to youthful travellers without mega-budgets.

He blamed the global media for the marked slowdown, and said he believes it will only be a "temporary blip" because of Greece's timeless appeal.

"There's something mystical about Greece," said the Australian who started his business 12 years ago.

"It tickles a different sense. (...) So we're not panicking."

Tourism and the foreign funds it generates are vital for Greece's hoped-for recovery from its deeply indebted state. The World Travel and Tourism Council said tourism's direct contribution to the Greek economy was more than 29 billion euros ($32 billion US) in 2014, accounting for just over 17 per cent of the country's GDP.

As such, the Greek National Tourist Board is taking steps to reassure tourists their credit cards and bank cards will work normally and that restrictions applied to Greek citizens will not apply to visitors.

"There are more rumours about cancellations than actual cancellations and reservations are still coming in," said Lyssandros Tsilidis, president of the Hellenic Association of Travel and Tourist Agencies. "Tourists are having no problems."

John Kopari, visiting from Duluth, Minnesota, added the crisis hasn't affected him and his family "one bit."

But for those who haven't yet booked their trips, such assurances are not soothing fears that the ATMs and the banks may soon run out of cash altogether, unless there is an infusion of euros from the European Central Bank. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

THE BIG THING: THE R-WORD

"We are in a fragile economic environment."
— Finance Minister Joe Oliver, July 7, 2015

1 Change of tone Finance Minister Joe Oliver's measured comments Tuesday stand in contrast to July 2, when he said, "We're going to see solid growth ... we don't believe there will be (a recession)." Recent months have seen tanking oil prices and the first drop in capital investment since the financial crisis. If the economy is shrinking, it could throw a wrench into the government's election promise of a balanced budget.

2 Who decides? Officially, a recession is two straight quarters of decline in gross domestic product (the total goods and services Canada produced during those three months). GDP fell 0.1 per cent in 2015's first quarter. Second-quarter results are due from Statistics Canada on Sept. 1. If they're negative, we'll be in recession.

3 Team recession A chorus from the private sector predicts tough times ahead. TD Bank argues the first half of 2015 was likely a recession, Bank of America Merrill Lynch says we appear to be in a downturn and CIBC economists say it's "a real possibility."

Make your patriot love truer: Read TRC report

Jesse Staniforth
For Metro

Last week, 34,000 people endured thunderstorms to celebrate Canada Day on Parliament Hill, where Prime Minister Stephen Harper told them, "A little bit of bad weather is never going to keep Canadians down." He said to the crowd, "We are a kind and generous society. No better place in the world than this country ... more confident, more prosperous, more united than ever — the best country in the world!"

In the 1700s, Dr. Samuel Johnson called patriotism "the last refuge of a scoundrel."

He meant not to disparage all patriots, but to note that, lacking other supports for their positions, people arguing in bad faith often rely on easy appeals to love of country.

Harper may have been right about some of the points he made that rainy day. But it was strange to hear such unchecked pronouncements a scant kilometre from the Delta Ottawa. It's where the Truth and Reconciliation Commission wrapped up its six years of investigation into what it called cultural genocide in the Indian Residential Schools.

Those of us present to hear statements at the TRC's Survivors' Sharing Circle have seen a far more complicated and tragic understanding of Canadian nationhood than tends to be presented in political speeches.

This is a bountiful country, yes, but one whose wealth has often come from exploitation of indigenous people and their lands. If it is a great country, that greatness has frequently been used to prevent discussion of the more painful aspects of our history.

And yet the realities of residential schools are now laid out in clear type, for all those who wish to know what our ancestors and their governments did to destroy indigenous communities and cultures in the name of our country and the notion of a white, European-Canadian identity.

The best response to crude patriotism is to educate yourself — to know what is this country you love, in all its weaknesses and faults. In that light, I'm joining the call — initiated by Chelsea Vowel and Wab Kinew, and carried on by Erica Violet Lee and Zoe Todd's #ReadtheTRCReport project — for Canadians to make the TRC's easy-to-read 400-page executive summary their primary piece of summer reading. Never has there been a better time for Canadians to learn the details of what our country did to indigenous people, and how our actions over 120 years provided the foundation of the addiction, abuse and dysfunction sadly endemic to so many aboriginal communities.

I don't intend to discourage people who love Canada from feeling how they do and expressing that love however they wish. But I believe those attached to this nation should face the evidence of the atrocities it was responsible for. So they may better understand the place they come from and love, may better love it in spite of its faults, and may better, as citizens, act upon what they learn from the truths told to the TRC.

This is a bountiful country, but one whose wealth has often come from exploitation of indigenous people and their lands.

To the Cosby fans who scoff at truth and consequences

This one goes out to you, the thousands of fans who packed auditoriums in Ontario last winter to watch Bill Cosby crack jokes, knowing full well he'd been accused by more than 20 women (at the time) of rape.

You gave him the benefit of the doubt, you told me. He (through a lawyer) dismissed the allegations as absurd, and that was good enough for you. He was still the iconic dad who could do no wrong.

Unless, by wrong, you mean purchasing the sedative Quaalude to give to women he wanted to have sex with. Cosby, under oath in 2005, admitted to doing just that, according to court documents newly obtained by the Associated Press. During that lawsuit, which was eventually settled out of court, he said he also gave one woman three half-pills of Benadryl.

Celebrity-father-figure love is blind. And that's why this revelation, as satisfying as it is for people like me, isn't really for me at all.

As I said — it's for you. You, mostly middle-aged crowd who piled into Kitchener's Centre in the Square theatre in January, months after snowballing accusations caused Netflix and NBC to cancel planned Cosby shows, amid a comedy tour collapsing under a slew of cancelled dates. I watched you from the press rows as you applauded Cosby's trademark antics, warm in your seats while protesters shouted in the cold outside.

Later that week, in London, Ont., he told a woman in the audience to be careful drinking around him.

"Ha ha ha ha!" you laughed.

Cosby, in sweaters knitted like a tangle of Technicolor snakes, had cradled you into adulthood with his quirky, principled parenting on The Cosby Show.

But do you recall Season 5, Episode 12? It's the one called "Truth or Consequences." In it, Cosby gives his daughter Vanessa and her boyfriend a stern talking-to after Vanessa lies to her parents about seeing him (she says she's doing homework).

The moral of the episode is twofold.

One, don't fall into the "abyss of untruth," to quote Clair Huxtable. That, in real-life terms, might look something like repeated denials that you ply women with drugs, when the truth is, you do.

Two, don't aid others in lies of their own. And that, in real-life terms, might look something like paying to see a comic who overwhelming evidence suggests is a rapist, so he can parade on stage and keep raking in money, truth be damned — and consequences.

5 FOOD TRENDS SWEET, BOOZY, CRISP OR PLAIN NUTTY

Chips made of broccoli. Maple water. Wine-spiked ice cream. Popcorn that didn't quite fulfil its destiny. These are some alternate-universe products at the recent Fancy Food Show in New York that could signal coming trends. Here are five potential foods of the future exhibitors were showing off. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

1 Sexy snacks

Holding a bag of chips with the word "Sexy" in big letters can cure shyness. At least that's what Sexy snacks founder Robert Ehrlich told visitors to his booth. "When you hold a bag, you are sort of empowering yourself," he says.

The most notable aspects of the snacks may be the name and Ehrlich, whose claim to fame is his founding of Pirate's Booty. says the snacks are a way for people to brand themselves, as they might with sneakers or handbags. The popcorn comes in flavours like Bangin' Cheddar and Brazilian Coconut, and the chips come in flavours including Spinach & Matcha Tea.

2 Broccoli Bites

A prevalent theme was snacks made from unusual ingredients; think bags of roasted chickpeas, cheese puffs made out of beans, and chips made out of seaweed.

Another example was Broccoli Bites from Rhythm Foods. Before they're dehydrated, the broccoli is tossed in a dressing made with seeds, herbs and spices to add flavour and prevent crumbling. Each 1.5-ounce bag has 150 calories.

Even though kale has surged in popularity in recent years, Rhythm Foods CEO Scott Jensen said he expects the broccoli snacks to be a lot easier to sell to buyers. And he's already working on the next vegetable snack: cauliflower.

3 Wine ice cream

Instead of a glass, this wine can be served in a cone.

Mercer's, a dairy in upstate New York, was offering tastes of its "wine ice cream," which has up to five per cent alcohol. The ice creams come in eight flavours including Strawberry Sparkling and Chocolate Cabernet.

Roxaina Hurlburt, a co-owner of Mercer's, said the dairy has been making traditional ice cream for 60 years and started packaging the wine ice cream in 2008. She said it's sold online and in about 200 locations around the U.S., including places like casinos and wineries. It's also sold in Montreal.

4 Half-popped kernels

Do you think those half-popped kernels at the bottom of the popcorn bag are the best part? Now two companies are selling bags of just those bits.

HalfPops and Pop'd Kerns offer the snacks in different flavours, with a one-ounce serving containing between 130 and 160 calories, depending on the flavour.

HalfPops, based in Bellevue, Wash., says it uses a proprietary process to cook the kernels. Six-ounce bags of HalfPops are available online and at about 2,000 U.S. locations, including some Whole Foods and Wegman's, said Mike Watts, the company's vice-president of marketing.

5 Maple water

Is maple water the next coconut water?

Drink Maple sells bottles of maple water it says is tapped from maple trees.

It's the same stuff that's boiled down into maple syrup. The clear liquid has the consistency of water and a lightly sweetened taste, with a 12-ounce bottle labelled as having 30 calories and seven grams of sugar.

The product also seems to hit on all the prevailing dietary trends: The company's website notes maple water is "low calorie, gluten-free, dairy-free and non-GMO." It also says "no trees are harmed" in the collection process.

Canadian brands, tapped in Ontario and Quebec, can be found in some local Whole Foods and small health-food stores.

Automat 2.0: Self-serve stores bring the farm to customers

Delivery man Michael Luminau puts greens in automat boxes in Paris on July 2. MICHEL EULER/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Diners in Paris are flashing back — and forward — to the era of the automat, but this time with a nod to organic farming.

A precursor to the era of fast food, automat eateries served hundreds of thousands of customers a day throughout the mid-20th century, allowing on-the-go diners to pick hot dishes from coin-operated metal lockers. Today, entrepreneurs in France and Scotland are appropriating the concept that once symbolized modernity to help customers get back to the land. Their automats offer not burgers and fries, but fresh and local produce and other ingredients.

Joseph Petit employs no staff at his two Paris stores. Both called Au Bout du Champ — "at the end of the field" — the small spaces are stacked with metal cubbies containing just-picked strawberries, hours-old eggs, and neat bunches of carrots or spring onions, depending on the season. Customers simply choose the box that contains the food they want to buy, then pay at a console which then opens the appropriate door.

It's a system, Petit said, that brings fresh food to urban areas where few other options exist, while also supporting local, small-scale agriculture.

"We have some of the best farmers in the world," the 31-year-old Parisian said outside one of his two shops. "But unfortunately, we consume many of our products from abroad. They aren't necessarily the best, they aren't necessarily fresh, and we don't really know who cultivated them."

Petit maintains direct relationships with the half-dozen or so producers he buys from; the suppliers vary according to the season. The farmers cultivate a variety of vegetables, fruits, mushrooms and herbs, in addition to eggs and juice. All of them work within 100 kilometres of Paris, and Petit and his colleagues go to collect the fresh harvest every day for delivery.

'Eat like a Greek' with these simple Mediterranean delicacies

The world's eyes are on Greece right now and so, too, our stomachs. We truly are a global village as we share our air, our climate and our economies. One way to support a country is to invest in or buy their exports. But that could just be my tummy talking.

Here are some excellent foods and flavours that come out of Greece:

An olive to know, love and devour

Greece produces some of the world's best olive oils from groves that are 500 to 1,500 years old. This means a root system that — like Greek culture — is steeped in terroir, history and love.

Kalamata olives have a protected designation of origin (PDO) title. This means that if it says Kalamata, it has to have been produced in Kalamata, Greece. This olive is the deep purple almond-shaped olive of intense juicy flavour, which develops on the tree as it must be picked ripe. Not to be confused with black olives, which can be of any variety and have a wide range of sizes, shapes and flavours.

Things can only get feta

Greek feta is made with a combination of goat's and sheep's milk cheese, which gives it a creamier texture than the cow's milk feta. It is brined in salt water for up to a couple of months. The more aged, the more firm the texture.

Come on people now, smile on your Greek brother. Do your bit and have a souvlaki cookout, Opa!

Rosé is wiser than you think

When you're a White Zinfandel, it's not easy being pink.

Though one of the best-selling wine styles in Canada, White Zin can't escape its reputation for simplistic flavours that often lean too far into gummy sweetness.

However, sales of more classically formed rosés are on an upswing across the country — especially those made locally.

Sutter Home's 2014 White Zinfandel ($9.05 - $12.49) is the original. The idea that a refreshing, pink wine could be created if red juice saw less skin contact was conceived at the winery back in the 1970s.

Berry-bright with a drier finish than most, Sutter Home's version is a perfect back deck mate on a hot day — especially if you pour it over ice.

Big Gay Ice Cream has bright future

Owners find success with good humour, unusual tastes

Bryan Petroff, left, and Douglas Quint co-own Big Gay Ice Cream, which started out in 2009 as a mobile truck selling soft-serve ice cream with unique toppings. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Concert bassoonist Douglas Quint needed a summer break from his PhD studies in music and was casting about for something unusual to do.

He decided to drive an ice-cream truck.

Hip-hop flutist Andrea Fisher, a friend from the Juilliard School, was already driving one and the New York Times had written a story about her. When the truck's owner said she could recruit more drivers, she put out a casting call on Facebook.

Quint signed up and would go on to launch his Big Gay Ice Cream business with partner Bryan Petroff.

Though he was close to completing his doctorate he'd become disillusioned.

"I thought, 'Why would I teach people how to play the bassoon when it's such a narrow career opportunity and there's no work?"'

Petroff suggested sprucing up the ice-cream truck menu to go beyond old-style sprinkles and dips.

"Why hadn't anyone taken an ice-cream truck and moved it into what desserts are now?" said Petroff, who was working as a meeting and event planner.

They shopped for unusual topping ingredients, whipped inexpensive store-bought ice cream to mimic soft-serve, and invited friends to tasting parties.

First on the menu was olive oil and sea salt.

"Then we added dulce de leche and ginger syrup and curries and different things, wasabi, they all became our first season's menu," said Petroff.

Today, the food truck is no more, but the soft-serve tradition carries on in two bricks-and-mortar locations in New York and one in Philadelphia. There are plans to open a shop in L.A. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Ex-Ex marks the frank sex talk

ROM-COM

Screenwriter says dialogue based on real conversations

Steve Gow
For Metro | Life

My Ex-Ex, starring Katherine Barrell, third from left, as a woman whose love life takes an unexpected turn, opens cross-Canada on Wednesday. Co-star Andre Bharti, left, wrote the screenplay and says a lot of the movie is "very true to life." MICHAEL HELMER

Inspiration can be a terribly fickle thing. For writer and actor Andre Bharti, however, it simply arose out of the pages of a supermarket tabloid.

"It was one of those movies that writes itself," laughed Bharti in Toronto recently. "I was reading the National Enquirer and there was an article where a psychic said she could connect you with your ex (and) I thought, what if she messes up?"

With that, the Toronto filmmaker composed My Ex-Ex — a new romantic comedy that follows a young woman who, after being dumped by her rich suitor, accepts spiritual advice to reunite with a deadbeat college boyfriend who can't even hold down a job under his father.

"To be honest, a lot of it is very true to life," said Bharti, admitting that although he also worked for his father — founder of one of Canada's leading merchant banks — his creative ambitions were never questioned.

"He supported me that way. I was writing poetry when I was six years old, so I think he realized I wasn't going to be the business guy."

Instead, Bharti studied drama at Queen's University in Kingston where he not only learned to write screenplays, he even found inspiration for the movie's cast of raunchy characters. Insisting on authenticity, My Ex-Ex has been praised for the candid way its characters speak about sex — especially the ladies.

"I met powerful females in Kingston and I could not believe how much raunchier they were than me," said Bharti.

"These are really beautiful, great ladies, but they talked about everything like in the movie. I didn't make that up. The character's names are different, so you wouldn't know who it is but those are real conversations."

With its forthright perspective on modern romance, My Ex-Ex has impressed in its recent festival run — so much so that the movie was selected as part of the Canadian Indie Film Series, where it premieres Wednesday at theatres across Canada.

"I never made this movie to win an Oscar (but) everyone who watches it says they leave with at least three (scenes) they can't forget," admitted Bharti.

"If you have a good sense of humour and take it for what it is, you'll hopefully have fun."

> I met powerful females in Kingston and I could not believe how much raunchier they were than me. Andre Bharti

MODERN LOVE

Going far ... but not too far:
"My heartfelt story might be on the more raunchy side, but I don't think it should offend anybody," said Bharti. "There's nothing sexist, racist or stupid like that (so) why would it be (offensive)?"

Guys like rom-coms, too:
"I think guys would get this movie as well as girls," said Bharti. "Romantic comedies — let's be honest, guys try to act tough, but we're really not. I cried at Pretty Woman."

It ain't easy being Canadian:
"When you're a Canadian filmmaker, you're kind of behind the 8-ball," said Bharti. "It was just a young crew that believed in the project and we really pushed — we did it in 18 days and no one complained."

THE CAST

Alongside Bharti, the roster of Canadian talent includes Katherine Barrell (The Scarehouse, Murdoch Mysteries), Ray Galletti (Hemlock Grove, Arrow), Jesse Camacho (Less Than Kind), Randal Edwards (Package Deal) and Alistair Forbes (Second City).

SCI-FI SERIES EXTANT RETURNS

Halle Berry says the best stuff is on TV

Ned Ehrbar
Metro Life

Last summer, astronaut Molly Woods (Halle Berry) thought she'd saved humanity from certain doom, but of course that's not the case or else there wouldn't be a Season 2 for Extant, Berry's first foray into network television. It airs Wednesdays at 10 p.m. ET/PT on Global.

So what has Berry learned from her first year on TV?

"It is a whole lot of work. I mean, I've never worked so hard in my life as last year," Berry says.

"And I was nursing — my baby was three months old — so I was doing drive-by nursings every two hours ... and I was in over my head with the amount of scenes we shoot in a day, the things I had to memorize."

Needless to say, Season 2 was a much smoother experience.

"This year, without having the baby nursing, is better than last year," she says.

"But it was an awakening last year. I thought, 'I'm going to go into TV, be at home with my family.' I didn't see my family and I never worked harder in my life.

"So hats off to everybody who does television, because it's a grind."

When Oscar winner Berry signed up for the show last year, it was big news — despite her being far from the first big-screen star to make the transition. But Berry insists there was no hesitation in her decision.

"Not in this day and age. Maybe 10 years ago I would have had cause to pause. But the best things, in my opinion, are on television," she says.

"As artists, we want to share what we do with the world and this is a really good medium to do that."

ROBOT KID

Extant features Berry's character grappling with having a robot son, Ethan, who ended up relegated to the cloud at the end of Season 1. Recent upgrades in Berry's own life have changed how she approaches that on-screen relationship.

"Now that I have a son, I really do see the difference in relationship, from having a little girl and having a boy and the special relationship that mothers and sons have," she says.

"I'm happy in our show this year that there is Ethan and I get to continue to explore what that relationship might be with a twist, because he is a robot. Does he take the place of a real child?... Can a robot have humanity? Can they love? Can they have a human exchange?"

Halle Berry is back on the small screen as astronaut Molly Woods in Extant, now in its second season. HANDOUT

Hyundai puts accent on value

ROAD TESTED

JIL McINTOSH/FOR METRO

REVIEW

Car delivers decent ride and content for its price

Jil McIntosh
For Metro

When I was a young driver — and I won't admit how long ago that was! — an entry-level car was a cheap car, with a tinny feel and few options.

That's seldom the case anymore, at least judging by my Hyundai Accent tester. This company was among the first to stuff in as many items as possible while keeping the price low, and while some other automakers have caught up with that, the Accent remains a solid, good-looking little car.

All Accents use a 1.6-litre four-cylinder engine that makes 138 horsepower. A six-speed manual transmission is available on most trim lines, while the mid-range GL and top-line GLS can also be optioned with a six-speed automatic transmission.

The Accent comes as a sedan, starting at $13,249, but I prefer the hatchback, which begins at $13,599 and goes up to $19,549 for the GLS with automatic transmission.

It's not the most exciting car to drive — the Mazda2 and Ford Fiesta are far sportier, for example — but it gets the job done, handling curves efficiently and with a smooth ride that's quiet over all but the very worst bumps.

All trim lines include air conditioning, which is an important consideration when you're price shopping: not all manufacturers include it in their rock-bottom stickers, and you may have to move up to a much pricier trim line to get it. The top-line Accent GLS includes such items as alloy wheels, automatic headlamps, heated seats, satellite radio, and a power sunroof.

The cabin is handsome, and the controls are simple and easy to use. Front-seat comfort is pretty good for an economy car, but the rear chairs are hard and flat. Rear-seat legroom is actually pretty good for a car this size, especially since there's enough space to slip your feet forward under the front seats.

> "It's not the most exciting car to drive ... but it gets the job done

Visibility could be a bit better out of that narrow rear window (a backup camera isn't available), and the deep cargo well accommodates tall items but also makes for a longer reach to lift your groceries out.

Still, overall, the Accent stays true to its roots: a decent little car for what it costs.

SECURITY

Smart car thieves can take your identity, too

Vehicle thefts may be falling in the U.S. and the U.K., but the emergence of a new generation of smarter car has also seen with it the emergence of an equally smart car thief.

"The FBI reports in its 2013 Uniform Crime Report that a vehicle is stolen every 45.1 seconds in the United States, which amounts to more than $4.1 billion in lost assets each year," said Patrick Clancy, vice-president of law enforcement of LoJack Corporation, a company that develops anti-theft and tracking devices for vehicles. "With only 54.8 per cent of stolen vehicles being recovered, auto theft is still a serious problem and we are now dealing with a more advanced, sophisticated thief. These individuals are increasingly creative, connected and dangerous in their approaches to steal your valuable assets."

Greater consequence

Thieves are increasingly targeting the most expensive, and therefore most connected cars on the road. And when a 'smart' car is taken, it's not just the owner's personal mobility that is compromised.

"The impact that today's connected vehicle thieves have on the individuals and businesses that fall victim to them is much greater," said Clancy.

Cars connect with our smartphones and therefore are an extension of our digital lives, meaning that as well as vehicle theft, drivers run the risk of identity theft, too.

"In recent years, the traditional methods, techniques and mindset towards auto theft has evolved," Clancy said. "Today, our vehicles hold critical information, such as our phone contacts, registration and insurance details, even the address and directions to our home."

In October, Jaguar Land Rover made headlines because thieves had found a way of replicating a Range Rover's smart key and simply opening the car and driving away.

There have also been a number of scare stories in the media in recent months about hacking a car and taking over its controls. However, initial investigations into smart-car hacking show that although it is possible on some models, it is too time consuming, complicated and costly to be worth the effort.

Security tips

However, regardless of a car's connectivity, consumers can take simple steps to mitigate the risks. For instance:

- Don't leave personal documents or paperwork relating to the car in the cabin.
- Likewise don't leave a smartphone, tablet or sat-nav system in the car when it's parked.
- For extra security, try to avoid on-street parking bays and plump for secure parking structures instead.

Connected cars might offer a greater appeal to car thieves, but that connectivity also means stolen vehicles are more likely to be located and returned again. AFP

ESSO 67-X

An icon of Canadian car culture

AUTO PILOT

Mike Goetz

Just like the country it was built to celebrate, the custom car known as the Esso 67-X is big, bold and beautiful.

Back in 1967, Canada was gripped in centennial fever. Everything was about celebrating or marking the 100th anniversary of Canadian federation.

For its part, Imperial Oil and its Esso brand of gas stations, rolled out a promotional contest called Roadshow 67. To enter, you had to collect five different "travel tips" only available at Esso dealers.

The four winners of the contest each received a fabulous Esso 67-X, complete with insurance, and extra warranties. Winners would be awarded their cars at the big centennial party and World's Fair in Montreal, otherwise known as Expo 67.

4

The number of Esso 67-X cars produced by designer and manufacturer George Barris.

George Barris was commissioned to design the 67-X and build four examples. Barris achieved worldwide fame as a customizer after creating "TV star cars," such as the Batmobile, the Munster Koach, and the jalopy that brought the Beverly Hillbillies into town.

Barris ended up making an additional 67-X for himself, to use as a tow car.

The basis of the 67-X is an Oldsmobile Toronado, complete with its 7-litre V8 engine, good for 385 horsepower and 480 lb.-ft. of torque.

The 67-X was billed as the "ultimate in family travel," with emphasis on excitement, safety and comfort.

After the outrageously swoopy body, which stretches more than 20 feet in length, the most notable feature of the 67-X is the rear "lounge area," which is essentially a small family room, circa 1967. Mom can swivel her seat around to play Monopoly with the kids on the lift-up table, and everyone can grab Twinkies from the portable picnic cooler, and groove to The Monkees on the 8-track tape player (complete with individual ear plugs).

Trevor Welfen of Chilliwack, B.C., owns the only known surviving Esso 67-X. He is old enough to remember the contest. As an avid collector and customizer of cool cars, he "always wondered what happened to them."

He heard stories, read newspaper clippings about the people that won them and subsequently sold them, searched the Internet, etc., to no avail.

Then, several years ago, when looking for another model on the website of a U.S. classic car dealer, he noticed a 67-X in the background in one of the pictures. The dealer mislabelled it as a 70-X, and that's why it never showed up on any Google search.

"As soon as I saw it, I just wanted to get it back here ... I didn't care what shape it was in."

By "back here" Trevor means Canada, where he believes this super rare and super cool example of Canadian car culture belongs.

Shopping the arms market

MLB

Sizing up the Blue Jays' potential short list for trades

Chicago White Sox starter Jeff Samardzija is the hottest name in Blue Jays trade buzz. Here's why, and who else might be out there to give the scuffling rotation a shot in the arm:

JEFF SAMARDZIJA, White Sox; 5-4, 4.33 ERA

The hard-throwing right-hander is free agent eligible next winter and wants to pitch for a contender. Samardzija's ERA, though, is at a career high while his 4.41 strikeout-to-walk ratio is almost half what it was a year ago. Still, he's a front-end starter who keeps the ball in the park (0.9 homers per nine innings).

Price tag: Two solid prospects.

Jays' chances: Good.

COLE HAMELS, Phillies; 5-6, 3.02 ERA

He's a top-of-the-line workhorse (200 innings in four of the past five seasons) who could free up Aaron Sanchez to help the bullpen when he returns from injury rehab. Hamels has drawn big-time interest from the Yankees, Dodgers and Astros — with Houston and Toronto reportedly not high on his list of preferred destinations. Money is also a big issue. He's owed the rest of his $22.5-million salary for this season and that same amount for the next three.

Price tag: One or two top prospects.

Jays' chances: Bidding war and salary will likely knock the Jays out of contention.

JOHNNY CUETO, Reds; 5-5, 2.84 ERA

Lots of talk about the Jays shooting for Cueto, a high-end starter, plus super closer Aroldis Chapman from the Reds, but that's fantasy. Cueto alone would be a huge addition with much less financial risk than Hamels — about $5 million left and free-agent eligible after this season. Coming off a career year — 243 innings, 242 strikeouts, just 169 hits allowed — but was on the DL three times in 2013. The AL West-leading Astros, Yankees and maybe the Royals are in the mix here as well.

Price tag: Two solid pitching prospects, for starters.

Despite less-than-stellar statistics with the White Sox this season, Jeff Samardzija is rumoured to be a top trade target for the Blue Jays. MIKE MCGINNIS/GETTY IMAGES

Jays' chances: Decent, if they're willing to part with enough young talent.

MAT LATOS, Marlins; 3-6, 4.90 ERA

A second or third starter who has won 14 games three times but is having an off year. Not a big strikeout guy (6.5 per nine innings) but hasn't finished with an ERA higher than 3.50 since his rookie year. The Jays were linked to him two years ago.

Price tag: For comparison's sake, the Marlins gave up ex-Jays prospect Anthony DeSclafani and Chad Wallach to get him. He makes $8.4 million this season.

Jays' chances: Slim, but a decent Plan B if top starters go elsewhere.

SCOTT KAZMIR, A's; 5-5, 2.56 ERA

Oakland is deciding whether to buy or sell on Kazmir, closer Tyler Clippard and utilityman Ben Zobrist. Kazmir, an all-star in 2014 and off to another good start, is the most likely to be moved but has said he hopes to stay in Oakland.

Price tag: One young major-league ready player.

Jays' chances: Toronto and Oakland are frequent trading partners and Kazmir could help a lot, so the Jays have a shot.

Scoring, net offence on the rise after first two weeks

It seems the CFL's new rule changes are having the desired affect.

The league announced Tuesday that through the first two weeks of the regular season, both scoring and net offence are up from last year. Teams have scored an average of 52.4 points per game (compared to 45.5 points last year) and accumulated 725 yards per contest (compared to 652 in 2014).

The CFL's board of governors were hoping to inject more offence into games when it adopted the rule change this off-season that neither a defensive back nor a receiver could initiate contact five yards beyond the line of scrimmage. A total of 21 penalties for illegal contact on a receiver have been issued.

Another new rule was the five interior linemen on punts being unable to leave the line of scrimmage until the ball is kicked, thus giving the returner more room to run. Through two games, Hamilton's Brandon Banks has taken two punts back for touchdowns.

Serena rallies past Azarenka

Serena Williams' latest Grand Slam match against Victoria Azarenka ended the same way as the previous nine — with Williams walking off as the winner.

The top-ranked Williams fought back from a set down Tuesday to beat Azarenka 3-6, 6-2, 6-3 on Centre Court to reach the Wimbledon semifinals and keep her bid alive for a fourth straight major title — a "Serena Slam."

Williams' next opponent will be Maria Sharapova, who beat unseeded American CoCo Vandeweghe in three sets.

Coming up with big serves when she needed them and getting stronger as the match wore on, Williams put on a dominant performance in the final two sets, winning seven straight games at one stretch, to run her Grand Slam winning streak to 26 matches.

"It's been up and down, up and down, but somehow I'm still alive," Williams said. "I don't know how. I'm just happy to be still here." Williams hit 17 aces, including three in each of her final two service games, to extend her career record against Azarenka to 17-3 — including 10-0 in Grand Slam play.

Meanwhile in the men's draw, Novak Djokovic finished his 6-7 (6), 6-7 (6), 6-1, 6-4, 7-5 fourth-round victory over Kevin Anderson; it was suspended because of darkness after four sets Monday.

Canada, Brazil tie in water polo thriller

Goalkeeper Jessica Gaudreault made a brilliant save with 17 seconds left to play as Canada held on for a 7-7 tie with Brazil in women's water polo on Tuesday in the first event of the Pan American Games.

Preliminary round water polo matches are being played before Friday's opening ceremonies so that the competition will be completed in time for the world aquatic championship starting July 24 in Russia.

Brazil's Helene Badocco scored the tying goal with 2:33 left in the fourth period. Gaudreault preserved the draw with a save on Izabella Maizza Chiappini with 17 seconds left to play.

Canada regained possession but couldn't penetrate the tough Brazilian defence at the other end of the pool. Emma Wright, Christine Robinson, Shae Fournier, Dominique Perrault, Katie Monton, Krystina Alogbo and Monika Eggens scored for No. 8 Canada, which is ranked six positions ahead of Brazil.

"This is the first Pan Ams for a lot of girls, too, so I think they were maybe feeling a little bit jittery and nervous. I think we'll be better tomorrow," said Robinson, who is making her third Pan Am appearance.

Canada will play Venezuela on Wednesday. In the other early games, Puerto Rico and Venezuela played to an 11-11 tie and the United States crushed Mexico 25-3. In the men's game, Canada also opened against Brazil, who represent their toughest group stage opponent, and we're just edged out 11-9.

IN BRIEF

A-Rod 'disappointed' by All-Star game omission

Alex Rodriguez says he is "obviously disappointed" to be left off the American League All-Star team, but considered himself "a long shot" to get selected.

The New York Yankees' designated hitter says he's happy just to be in the conversation, and hopes the four days off over the All-Star break will benefit him.

Rodriguez, who turns 40 on July 27, entered Tuesday batting .284 with 16 homers and 47 RBIs after sitting out last season while serving a drug suspension. Seattle slugger Nelson Cruz was elected by fans to start at DH for the AL, and players voted in Texas designated hitter Prince Fielder as a reserve. Rodriguez says he's happy for Fielder because he's also a big comeback story and is having a "phenomenal" year.

IT'S ALL IN THE STARS by Sally Brompton

Aries March 21 - April 20
Like everyone you make your share of mistakes but you are not afraid to admit it, and that fact gives you an edge. While others are still trying to deny that they messed up you will be retracing your steps.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
The only thing that matters today is that you follow your instincts and follow to the letter what your inner voice tells you. Even if the whole world says you are mad you must not change direction.

Gemini May 22 - June 21
You have done a lot of thinking in recent weeks and now it is time to put what you discovered, about yourself and about the wider world, to good use.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
Stop feeling sorry for yourself and start doing the things that will make your life more satisfying and secure. Mind planet Mercury joins the Sun in your sign today, so you will know what needs to be done.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
You may not understand why you feel a certain way but you must not ignore your emotions. If you want to think clearly today it will pay to shut yourself off from outside influences.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
You like to be helpful but you must not do other people's work for them. The planets warn that if you do just one little thing for someone today you will end up doing everything for them for the rest of the week.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Reach out and make contact with someone in a position of authority today, As Mercury, your ruler, crosses into the career area of your chart you clearly know what it is you want and how to get it.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
You will speak from the heart today but not everyone will want to hear what you say. Some people find the truth uncomfortable and one person in particular will kick up a fuss.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
You have allowed certain issues to slide and if you don't do something about them soon it will be too late. The fact is you have relied too heavily on others to make decisions for you.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Don't keep your thoughts and feelings to yourself today because others will know in an instant what you are trying to hide. What have you got to be embarrassed about?

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Something in your life is clearly not working and needs to be changed but you find it difficult to admit that. Mercury, planet of the mind, changes signs today and it will help you change your mind too.

Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20
Sticking to a rigid plan of action will limit your options and make success much harder to come by, so be flexible. Most importantly, don't set targets. Take each day as it comes.
